

alevin

I am a just-hatched salmon. Many of my friends have been eaten by other fish.

bear

I drag salmon carcasses into the riparian forest to consume them. Populations of me and my family may be 80 times denser in coastal areas, than in interior areas, where salmon are more abundant. Raccoons are my cousins.

beaver

I feed on riparian trees and vegetation that may have been fertilized by salmon-derived nutrients. I have a big, flat tail.

bobcat

I feed on salmon carcasses and have poor peripheral vision. My tail is stubby.

caddysfly

I feed on vegetation which may have been fertilized by salmon carcasses. Salmon eat me and my friends. I have six legs.

cougar

I feed on salmon carcasses. I also eat other mammals that may have benefited from salmon-derived nutrients. My tail helps me balance.

coyote

I feed on salmon carcasses and love to howl with my friends.

deer

I browse riparian shrubs and vegetation that may have been fertilized by salmon carcasses. I also have been known to feed on salmon carcasses. I have long ears and hooves. I'm the smallest cervid living on the Olympic Peninsula.

eagle

I migrate through the air to areas where salmon runs are active.

elk

I feed on riparian grasses that may have been fertilized by salmon carcasses. I am the largest cervid living on the Olympic Peninsula.

fisher

I feed on salmon carcasses. I mostly feed on rodents and hares that may have benefited from salmon-derived nutrients. My cousin is the otter.

flying squirrel

I feed on fungi that may have been fertilized by salmon-derived nutrients and am mostly active at night. I have 'wing flaps' but cannot fly.

grouse

I browse on vegetation that may have been fertilized by salmon carcasses. To my chagrin, I have been confused at times...to poultry.

hare

I browse on vegetation that may have been fertilized by salmon carcasses. I have long ears. I watch out at night for owls. My long ears help for me to hear them coming.

harlequin duck

I feed salmon eggs and on benthic macroinvertebrates that may have fed on salmon carcasses or benefited from salmon-derived nutrients. Humans have named me after a clown.

marten

I feed on salmon carcasses and on rodents that may have benefited from salmon-derived nutrients. My cousin is the fisher.

skunk

Even I may feed on salmon carcasses. The smell of dead salmon never bothers me because I have a really good 'instink'.

otter

I love to swim and feed on salmon and other fish. I am in the weasel family.

raccoon

I eat just about anything, including salmon carcasses. My cousin is the bear.
